A HINT FOR HUSBANDS.

An amusing occurrence has just come to light in this city, which although happening several weeks ago, is none the less interesting as an illustration of how a wife prevented an unfaithful husband from proving untrue to his plighted troth. A certain merchant in this city whom we will designate A., had engaged the services of a pretty, young girl to do general housework in his family. As the days rolled by, A. grew more and more interested in the handsome looks of the girl, and after a short time became so violently enamored of her that he requested a meeting. At first the girl very sensibly refused to grant this, but was finally, by much persuasion, induced to partially promise to consider the matter, and if she should find nothing wrong in it, to comply with his wishes. During this conversation A. instructed the girl to place his napkin under his plate at breakfast on the following Sunday should she decide to grant him an interview, and if not to place it as usual. After this conversation the girl grew remorseful and feeling that she had done wrong by harboring, even for an instant, the thought of doing a thing so unjust to her employer's wife, went to her and told her the whole story, and among other things mentioned that he had promised her a new silk dress should she come to his store at a certain hour in the evening.

A's wife didn't grow angry, didn't rave and stamp and make things fly generally, but went about in a business like way to discover for herself the truth of the girl's statements, and thus to expose her husband's infidelity. On the following Sunday, accordingly, the husband's napkin was duly placed beneath the plate and he was thus assured of the success of his little plot, and made confident of the fulfillment of his wishes. On the evening previously agreed upon, the wife dressed herself up in the servant girl's clothes, and heavily veiled started for the store. Here she met her husband, and by refusing to remove her veil and by the use of other womanly tactics, succeeded in leaving him under the impression that she was having an assignation with the girl. In course of time a silk dress was given her, and then the wife started home. The next morning the conversation was opened in the following style:

Wife—"Where was you last night, deary?"
A—"I was at church last evening, my love."
Wife—"Are you sure, deary?"
A—"Why, certainly, love; what makes you doubt me?"
Wife—"Well, deary, I got a nice present last evening."
Wife—"Wait a moment, and I will get it."
The wife goes to a clothes press and produces a roll of silk.
Grand Tableau. Wife crying, husband almost dying, and servant girl sadly sighing at the blasted hopes and ruined prospects which her revelation had caused. The affair was finally hushed up and the course of their love is again running smoothly.—[Akron (O.) Beacon.

THE PRIME OF LIFE.—When does the prime of life occur? Is it when the youth has thrown off his half-man, half-boy habits, and emerges into the full-blown man? Is it when the young man has sown his expected crop of wild oats and is prepared to settle down to live on the money his foolish father has slaved for during a whole life-time? Is it before the almond tree commences to flourish? Is it when the frame is erect, when the eyes glisten and the man feels himself "every inch a man"? We think not. The prime time of a man's life is that time when he arrives at a just estimation of the ability the great God has endowed him with, and arrives at a determination to put his ability to a good use and endeavors to benefit humanity. We think that a man may be in his prime at either twenty-one, fifty, or even seventy years of age. Some trees require more years to attain their full growth, and although the tree that arrives at stately beauty at twenty years is an object of admiration, and even wonder, those who require a greater amount of time to mature are generally of greater longevity and more useful both during life and after death. The question, "What is the prime of life?" is hereby left open for discussion.—[Virg. Chronicle.

The general prevalence of disease among horses, and the special interest in them which grows out of their present condition, gives value to the following statistics: The whole number of horses in the United States is 8,619,210. Of these, 7,132,849 are on farms, and 1,547,370 in cities and towns and otherwise not on farms. Nevada is put down for 14,674.—[Enterprise.

The young man who scissored for a Picayunish New Orleans paper, parts his hair in the middle and claws the piano. Owing to the immensity of his claws, a piano has to be constructed for his special use, with shingles for keys.
